

To improve the quality of education universities should spend more money on salaries for university professors:

There is no doubt that university professors are the backbone of academic education without who students would be deprived of a great source of knowledge. However, whether universities should raise professors' salaries to boost the quality of education or not has turned into a hectic phenomenon recently. Despite the popular belief about the satisfactory amount of professors' salaries currently, I firmly contend that professors' salaries should be increased dramatically in order to guarantee the highest possible level of motivation for them. In the following essay, I will try to shed more light on my vantage point by providing some conspicuous reasons and ample examples.

To begin with, improving professors' salaries in university is, from an objective perspective, the promising opportunity and unique way for improving the amount of eagerness and enthusiasm among professors in order to be more responsible and much more conscientious. For one thing, when it comes to improving the level of the knowledge in universities, financial purpose and sufficient earning should be taken into account to provide satisfying feeling in the workplace to make them more vigorous and fully-potential professors. For another, increasing professors' wages or salaries either implicitly or explicitly increase the self-confidence and self-satisfaction among professors in terms of boost their abilities in a series of features including creativity in the way of teaching or being strict about time in their schedule. Furthermore, generally speaking, to be more zoomed and conscious in teaching there is no way but to give seemingly effective raising in the salary which helps professors a lot. However, lucky us, the compass of merits of rising professors' salaries is far beyond just emotional benefits.

Another indispensable charm of increasing professors' salaries in university is the fact that there would be many more people in the high level of wealth in society from this type of people which dramatically affects positively on folk's minds in the teaching issues and it's gain in the long run. For one thing, this kind of job, teaching and being professor, is an ego-boosting matter, which gives either professors or students a personality boost and relieves their passion in order to improve their output in the long run. Generally speaking, at these modern technological and progressive days, we are in the dawn of mental and creative jobs like teaching as a stylish job, and dusk of some rudimentary and false jobs which needs completely our physical labors. From an objective point of view, while we show off appropriately by our good features and jobs, we ultimately advertise them among our adults and students to give them enough eagerness to catch them as the ultimate goal. For another, by this fabulous change in our breeding ground actually, we would do our best, not only we make our good type of people, professors, satisfied and glad, but also we have already investigated on students in order to choose their career in their close future, and make our next generation more educated and knowledgeable. Furthermore, the high rate of professors' salaries plays an important role to persuade and encourage students to be a professor as an educated person in the next generation. The fantastic positive change in the way of teaching accompanied by a high probability to have more essential enthusiasm to motor the student forward makes this change one of the most constructive aspects of boosting the level of education.

Following the previous contents, there are numerous general financial benefits thanks to increasing professors' salaries. For one thing, this action can have some influential effects on governmental income or national capital because there would be more salaries and then either more deposit money into the people's bank account or more spending money into the financial cycle. For another, by increasing the educational earning trend, in the long run, there would be more opportunities to probably import or export such as books, learning materials, tools, and some stuff like that. Furthermore, these kinds of gratifications among people especially the high-level and educated ones, keeping their full-potential to discover brilliant horizons and would be less likely to feel disaster and defeat.

All things considered, not only does increasing the professors' salaries boost their egos to get more emotional benefits, but also it can encourage students to choose teaching as their future stylish career, and also elevate the amount of earning rate either individually or domestically. Having enough amounts of self-confidence and being more passionate and eager has shaped by allocating more salaries to professors. Thus I firmly contend that increasing the professors' salaries could be considered as a “must” rather than an option.